Background

Housing nondiscrimination laws protect people from being unfairly evicted, denied housing, or refused the ability to rent or buy housing because of some aspect of who they are. While state laws vary, these laws commonly include protections against discrimination based on race, religion, age, disability, sex, and—less commonly—sexual orientation or gender identity.

NOTE:

As of February 11, 2021, the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) issued an memorandum \(HUD No. 21-021\) confirming that it is illegal to discriminate in housing based on sexual orientation and gender identity. As a result, LGBTQ people across the country can file housing discrimination complaints with HUD. Some states also have explicit laws against housing discrimination based on sexual orientation and/or gender identity, and these are reported below. These state laws remain important so that LGBTQ people are protected against discrimination at every level of government, and because they are often passed alongside additional protections not yet enshrined in federal law, such as protections against discrimination in public places.

State-by-State Sources & More Detail

Alabama

- No state housing nondiscrimination law enumerating sexual orientation or gender identity, though federal agency offers protections (see note)

Alaska

- No state housing nondiscrimination law enumerating sexual orientation or gender identity, though federal agency offers protections (see note)
- Formerly, following the June 2020 U.S. Supreme Court ruling in Bostock v. Clayton County, Georgia, the Alaska state agency explicitly interpreted existing state protections against discrimination based on sex to include both sexual orientation and gender identity for employment, housing, public accommodations, credit/lending, and government agencies/practices. See archived capture of Alaska State Commission for Human Rights (announced Dec 2020), agency social media post (Dec 2020), and subsequent guidance with further detail (Feb 2021). However, under pressure from conservative interest groups amid the 2022 election season, in August 2022 the agency rescinded its interpretation for all areas except for employment, which was explicitly covered by the U.S. Supreme Court ruling in Bostock. See this coverage for more details about this reversal, and see also the agency's social media post announcing the change (August 2022).
